Tagore, as in the name of an Indian national hero, is the village of the village-magnate Parsis, Mr. Paymaster who made all his money by spinning wool into thread at a fast rate. After much ado, he asks his son and young brother, their sister, Sohrab, and his nephew Peyman to live in the old ancestral home by the Zayandeh River where the Parsis once lived. But the Parsis fled in small boats after Mr. Paymaster was burned alive. Now, the brothers, son, and nephew live in a gloomy house with the daughter-in-law, their sister, Parveen. Mr. Paymaster has given the young Parsis a car, as they had always wanted. But Parveen shows him that the car is for her father-in-law, not him. So the younger brother, Sohrab, sets out to search for the elusive Ferrari to give it to their father. Sohrab is not like the others. He knows no English or Persian. He has no friends in the big city of Kishitwar. He struggles to put his hair in a queue, and he cannot figure out which end of the car to drive.
